Records, Rotated

Dow to record close at 50,644 as the chip rally paused. QCOM −6.20% on profit-taking after ByteDance ASIC headline; banks led losses on Dimon's $20B M&A signal. Crude broke below $90 on Iran-Hormuz back-and-forth.

THE SESSION

Tuesday's Micron-led chip surge gave way to a digesting tape on Wednesday, with leadership rotating from semiconductors to industrials and the Dow closing at a fresh record while the S&P and Nasdaq held theirs by the thinnest of margins. The Dow added 182.60 points (↑0.36%) to 50,644.28, a record close, while the S&P 500 ticked ↑0.03% to 7,521.29 and the Nasdaq advanced ↑0.07% to 26,674.73 — the tape's three indexes finishing within a hair of each other after Tuesday's broad rally. The Russell 2000 finished essentially flat at –0.02%, and the VIX compressed another 4.06% to 16.32.

The rotation was the story. Tuesday's memory-cycle catalyst — Micron crossing $1 trillion on UBS's near-tripling of its target — pulled the broader chip stack with it. Wednesday brought the pause: QCOM gave back −6.20% as traders booked profits on the ByteDance ASIC supply headline that helped power Tuesday's 4.48% run; MRVL eased −4.59% ahead of its fiscal Q1 print scheduled for after today's close; KEYS, AMD, NVDA, and NXPI all finished modestly lower. TSM was the chip-side exception at ↑2.52%, holding leadership where the rest of the complex took a breath.

Energy carried the other half of the rotation. Crude broke below $90 — settling at $88.68 after a −5.55% session per CNBC — on the morning's Iranian state media headline suggesting commercial traffic through the Strait of Hormuz could return to pre-war levels within a month. The White House labeled the purported memorandum a "complete fabrication," and oil pared its losses into the close. The IOWN energy line tracked the move: CVX −1.25%, OKE −2.47%, VLO −0.46%, CNX −2.85%, DVN −1.93%. The morning brief framed the energy sleeve as positioned at the spread between framework-holds and framework-fails — Wednesday's tape priced the framework half a step closer to holding.

Banks were the other notable laggard: JPMorgan finished down roughly 2% per CNBC after CEO Jamie Dimon told the audience at the bank's investor day that the firm could spend as much as $20 billion on an acquisition over the next couple of years. The financial sleeve held up better inside the IOWN portfolio — HOOD ↑2.89% on its AI agent trading launch, SYF ↑0.26% — but the broader signal was a tape willing to sell mega-cap financials after weeks of leadership. STLD led the materials line at ↑3.09% as the tariff regime continued to backstop domestic steel pricing, and the consumer staples sleeve quietly carried weight: CL ↑1.60%, CHD ↑1.39%, GPC ↑1.39%, FAST ↑0.83%.

IOWN Tactical: the calendar tightens from here. MRVL prints tonight, the April PCE deflator and second Q1 GDP estimate release at 8:30 a.m. ET Thursday, and Dell reports Thursday after the close. Wednesday's rotation reads less as conviction loss in the AI infrastructure thesis and more as a pause before the data set the next anchor. Discipline through positioning extremes.

IOWN HOLDINGS: NOTABLE MOVERS

WINNERS

SUPV +9.24% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Argentine bank Grupo Supervielle led the IOWN sleeve at $9.22 after a wide intraday range from $8.33 to $9.55. The move continues a recurring pattern of high-beta finishes around month-end positioning in the Argentine ADR complex.

HUT +4.53% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Hut 8 closed at $117.64 with a notably wide intraday range from $109.64 to $119.61 — the bid in crypto-miner equities held even as IBIT and ETHA both finished red. The AI compute pivot continues to differentiate HUT from pure-play mining names.

STLD +3.09% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Steel Dynamics added $7.73 to $258.22 on a Section 232 backstop story that has carried the name through tariff-cycle uncertainty. Domestic supply discipline and the aluminum ramp remain the two-prong thesis.

HOOD +2.89% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Robinhood closed at $76.23 on the launch of its AI agent trading product per Yahoo coverage. The financial sleeve's standout while the broader bank line gave back gains on Dimon's M&A signal.

TSM +2.52% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Taiwan Semi finished at $422.73 (↑$10.41) and held leadership while the rest of the chip stack paused. The foundry layer's capacity story continues to compound regardless of single-name de-risking around earnings dates.

CL +1.60% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Colgate-Palmolive closed at $91.29 — the staples sleeve quietly carried weight as the tape rotated out of high-beta chips. CHD (↑1.39%) and GPC (↑1.39%) tracked the same pattern.

DECLINERS

QCOM –6.20% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Qualcomm closed at $233.40 (−$15.42) as traders booked gains from Tuesday's 4.48% session on the Bloomberg-reported ByteDance ASIC supply deal. Per Benzinga, the market may have already priced much of the AI-data-center diversification into the recent rally.

MRVL –4.59% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Marvell eased to $198.70 ahead of tonight's fiscal Q1 print. Per consensus referenced in our coverage, expectations sit near $0.80 EPS on $2.40B revenue with custom AI silicon as the focal point. Implied volatility was wide into the bell.

FTNT –4.50% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Fortinet closed at $127.93 after a session range from $126.78 to $131.50. Cybersecurity gave back gains broadly even as the sector retains a constructive analyst posture into the back half of 2026.

COIN –3.46% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Coinbase finished at $173.78 as the broader digital asset complex traded heavier — Bitcoin slipped −1.05% to $75,187 and IBIT closed −1.26%. The HOOD bid did not extend to COIN's exchange model.

AEM –3.13% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Agnico Eagle closed at $174.91 as gold gave back −1.05% to $4,455 on the day's peace-progression headlines compressing the safety bid. The precious metals sleeve absorbed the move without trading through prior support.

SYK –2.26% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Stryker closed at $305.94 (−$7.06) on a session range from $300.21 to $315.68. The medical device line gave back recent strength without specific catalyst noted on the tape.

VST –2.68% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Vistra closed at $160.15 as the AI-power line eased alongside the broader chip-stack pause. The data-center buildout thesis remains the operative frame heading into Dell's Thursday-after-close print.

OKE –2.47% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

ONEOK at $88.21 tracked the broader energy sleeve lower as crude broke below $90. The midstream fee structure provides cash-flow ballast through transition windows like this one.

HOLDINGS NEWS

HOOD launches AI agent trading. Per Yahoo Finance coverage, Robinhood rolled out its AI agent trading product, positioning the brokerage one layer deeper into the autonomous-execution stack. The launch contributed to the ↑2.89% session.

MRVL fiscal Q1 print tonight. Marvell reports after the close with consensus near $0.80 EPS on $2.40B revenue per the earnings calendar. Custom AI silicon revenue trajectory and any guidance revision will set the chip-tape tone into Friday's open.

QCOM ByteDance ASIC headline. Per Bloomberg reporting referenced by Benzinga, Qualcomm reached a deal Tuesday to supply ByteDance with ASICs for AI data centers, with the buyer reportedly planning to purchase millions of chips. Wednesday's −6.20% reflected profit-taking on the announcement rather than a re-rating of the thesis.
