S&P 500 −0.28% after erasing a 1% drop. Brent spiked to $119, reversed to $108 on Hormuz reopening. Fed holds, signals one cut. Gold −4.9%.

THE SESSION

Equities recovered most of the day's losses as oil reversed sharply and Israel signaled it was helping the U.S. reopen the Strait of Hormuz. The S&P 500 fell 0.28% to 6,606, paring what had been a 1% drop at the morning low. The Dow lost 204 points (−0.44%) to 46,021. The Nasdaq slipped 0.28% to 22,091. The Russell 2000 was the session's standout, finishing up 0.65% at 2,495 as small-cap energy and financial names outperformed.

Oil was the main event. Brent crude spiked above $119 intraday after Iranian strikes hit Qatari LNG infrastructure and a Saudi refinery, briefly removing an estimated 17% of global LNG production. The spike reversed hard once Prime Minister Netanyahu told media that Israel was actively assisting in reopening the Strait of Hormuz and that Iran could no longer enrich uranium or manufacture ballistic missiles. Brent settled near $108.65, up 1.2% on the day. WTI closed at $96.14, roughly flat.

The Fed held rates at 3.50–3.75% as expected, projecting one cut for the remainder of 2026. Chair Powell called growth "solid" and sidestepped direct comment on the conflict, though the FOMC statement acknowledged "elevated uncertainty." Markets have now effectively priced out any near-term easing. Gold fell nearly 5% to $4,659 as the dollar strengthened on the hawkish hold, and Bitcoin slipped 1.3% to $70,322.

IOWN Tactical: The S&P 500 is now trading near its 200-day moving average around 6,600. Drawdown from the January high of 7,002 sits at roughly −5.7%. Our BUY tranches begin at −20% from the all-time high—well below current levels. Patience is the position.

WINNERS

LRCX +4.13% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Led the portfolio higher as semiconductor equipment names caught a bid. Lam Research benefits from tight memory supply and rising capex plans across the industry, including Micron's revised $25B spend.

SUPV +4.33% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Argentine banking name continued its run as the country's reform narrative attracts capital. Grupo Supervielle benefits from easing capital controls and a stabilizing peso.

ATAT +4.11% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Atmus Filtration advanced alongside the energy complex. The filtration business is tied to heavy-duty trucking and industrial activity, both supported by elevated fuel prices.

MARA +3.36% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Marathon Digital rallied as Bitcoin held the $70,000 level despite broad risk-off trading. Miners continue to benefit from improving hash economics post-halving.

AMD +2.91% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Advanced Micro Devices gained as investors rotated within semis following Micron's blowout earnings. AMD's AI accelerator pipeline remains a tailwind even as NVDA pulled back.

DECLINERS

AEM –5.77% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Gold's 4.9% selloff weighed heavily on the miner. The decline reflects margin-call-driven liquidation in precious metals as the dollar strengthened on the Fed's hawkish hold.

FINV –4.93% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

FinVolution pulled back as Chinese ADRs faced renewed selling pressure. PDD also declined 3.3%, reflecting broader caution on emerging-market exposure amid the geopolitical backdrop.

GFI –4.72% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Gold Fields followed the metal lower, shedding nearly 5% in sympathy with the sharp gold correction. South African miners are particularly sensitive to dollar-denominated moves.

ORI –3.71% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Old Republic fell after a Q4 property and casualty report showed mixed results. The P&C segment faces headwinds from rising reinsurance costs and elevated cat-loss expectations.

PDD –3.27% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

PDD Holdings declined as trade war rhetoric resurfaced alongside the Iran conflict. Chinese e-commerce names remain vulnerable to any widening of tariff actions.

HOLDINGS NEWS

NVDA −1.02% (Growth Portfolio). Nvidia fell modestly as the post-GTC rally faded and Micron's earnings-day selloff spilled into the broader semiconductor complex. Micron's revised $25B capex guidance raised cycle-peak concerns across the memory supply chain. Nvidia's Vera Rubin platform, which relies on Micron's HBM4, remains on track. CEO Jensen Huang's GTC keynote projected $1 trillion in orders for Blackwell and Vera Rubin systems through 2027.

LRCX +4.13% (Dividend Strategy). Lam Research was among the top S&P 500 gainers as Micron's massive revenue beat validated the memory equipment spending cycle. The tight DRAM and NAND supply environment supports continued demand for Lam's etch and deposition tools.

KEYS +2.14% (Growth Portfolio). Keysight Technologies announced a collaboration with AttoTude on advanced signal analysis for terahertz interconnect development, reinforcing its positioning in next-generation semiconductor test infrastructure.

LMT −0.74% (Dividend Strategy). Lockheed Martin dipped as defense stocks showed mixed performance amid the ongoing conflict. A $4.25B IP misappropriation lawsuit continues to weigh on sentiment, though the company's backlog remains robust.
