Correction Confirmed

S&P −1.57% to seven-month low. Fifth straight weekly decline. Dow and Nasdaq 100 enter correction. Brent settles at $112.57.

THE SESSION

The deadline moved. The market didn't. President Trump extended his power-plant strike ultimatum by ten days to April 6, framing it as a diplomatic concession after Iran allowed ten Pakistani-flagged oil tankers through the Strait. Futures briefly lifted on the Thursday-evening announcement, but Friday's session erased any optimism. The S&P 500 fell 1.57% to 6,375.66—a seven-month low—completing its fifth consecutive weekly decline, the longest losing streak since 2022. The Dow shed 1.73% and confirmed correction territory, joining the Nasdaq 100 which crossed the threshold earlier in the week. The Russell 2000 dropped 1.75%.

Brent crude settled at $112.57, up 4.22% and the highest close since July 2022. WTI briefly touched $100 before settling at $99.64. Rystad Energy noted the global system has shifted from "buffered to fragile" after nearly 500 million barrels of cumulative supply losses since the Strait closed. The VIX surged 13.16% to 31.05, its second straight session above 30. Ten-year Treasury yields climbed as bonds again offered no refuge, and futures traders pushed the probability of a Fed rate hike by year-end above 50% for the first time—a measure of how thoroughly the stagflation narrative has taken hold.

Gold was the session's surprise. After falling 3.76% on Thursday in what appeared to be a confirmed inverse-to-oil pattern, gold reversed sharply on Friday, gaining 2.66% to approximately $4,492. The reversal complicates the thesis that escalation automatically compresses gold; today's move suggests the metal can rally alongside oil when risk-off flows are broad enough. AEM gained 3.11% and GFI surged 4.54%, recovering most of Thursday's losses. The digital asset sleeve continued lower: Bitcoin fell 3.98% to $66,035, IBIT declined 3.66%, and the miners tracked BTC with HUT down 6.28% and MARA down 6.53%.

Only energy, materials, and utilities escaped the selloff. VLO added 2.49%, CVX gained 1.62%, and CNX rose 1.42%. Among defensives, CHD advanced 1.58% and BKH added 0.34%. Tech bore the brunt: cybersecurity names fell sharply after reports that Anthropic is testing an advanced new AI model, with FTNT declining 3.49% alongside CrowdStrike and Palo Alto Networks each losing more than 5%.

IOWN Tactical: The S&P 500 is now approximately 8% below its October peak—approaching but not yet at the −20% threshold where the first tranche of capital deploys. The energy sleeve continues to function as designed, providing ballast when the conflict intensifies. Patience is not passive—it is the strategy.

IOWN HOLDINGS: NOTABLE MOVERS

WINNERS

GFI +4.54% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Gold miners rallied as spot gold reversed sharply higher. GFI recovered most of Thursday's 4.19% decline. The structural gold thesis remains intact despite session-to-session volatility.

AEM +3.11% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Senior gold producer tracked the metal higher. Agnico continues to benefit from elevated gold prices even as daily swings widen. Production guidance remains firm.

VLO +2.49% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Refining margins remain robust with Brent above $112 and WTI near $100. VLO has been the single strongest performer in the portfolio since the conflict began. Energy ballast working as intended.

CVX +1.62% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Integrated major benefited from crude's surge to the highest level since 2022. Chevron's upstream exposure and Gulf production assets are directly leveraged to the Hormuz premium.

CHD +1.58% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Consumer staples drew a defensive bid as risk-off flows favored stable, low-volatility names. Church & Dwight's household products portfolio is largely insulated from energy cost pass-through.

DECLINERS

COIN –7.06% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Coinbase sold off alongside Bitcoin's 3.98% decline. Reports of crypto theft coverage limits and broad risk-off sentiment compounded the pressure. COIN is now down more than 15% since the war began.

MARA –6.53% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Bitcoin miner tracked BTC lower for the second consecutive session. The digital asset sleeve faces sustained headwinds while the geopolitical overhang persists.

HUT –6.28% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Another sharp session for the miner after Thursday's 6.28% decline. HUT's leverage to BTC amplifies moves in both directions; the current environment favors patience over action.

HOOD –6.15% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Robinhood's crypto-adjacent revenue mix weighed on shares. Elevated volatility typically benefits trading volumes, but the direction of the underlying assets matters more at this stage.

SUPV –4.72% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Argentine bank sold off amid emerging-market risk aversion. Geopolitical uncertainty and dollar strength are compressing EM valuations broadly.

HOLDINGS NEWS

FTNT −3.49%: Cybersecurity sector fell sharply after Anthropic AI disclosure. Reports that Anthropic is testing an advanced new model rattled cybersecurity names across the board. CrowdStrike fell 5.77% and Palo Alto Networks dropped 5.86%. The concern: more capable AI could heighten digital threats, but the sell-off appears sentiment-driven rather than fundamental. Fortinet's recurring revenue model and network security focus are not directly threatened by the development.

CAT −1.11%: Trump remarks on farm equipment costs pressured shares. The president said tractor costs should be lowered, weighing on Caterpillar and Deere. CAT's diversified infrastructure and mining exposure limits the direct impact, but the headline added to an already difficult session for industrials.

CL +0.18%: Colgate must face lawsuits over children's mouth rinse safety. A court ruled that Colgate-Palmolive must defend claims related to its children's oral care products. The stock showed resilience despite the legal development, closing marginally higher on the defensive bid.
