

Green Against the Grain

S&P -0.33%, Nasdaq -1.29% as Alphabet and the AI hyperscalers dragged the cap-weighted tape. Chips extended Thursday's rally and energy held its bid. Both strategies closed green.

THE SESSION

Both books finished the day in the green; the cap-weighted indices did not. That single line is the story of June 22. The Dividend Strategy added 0.07% and the Growth Portfolio gained 0.98% on a session where the S&P 500 slipped 0.33% and the Nasdaq fell 1.29%. The drag was concentrated and identifiable: Alphabet shed roughly 5% and the rest of the AI hyperscaler cohort gave back ground on renewed questions about the scale of capital spending. Because those names dominate the cap-weighted tape and are largely absent from our two books, the indices and our portfolios pointed in opposite directions.

Underneath the megacap headline, the market was broader and healthier than the index print suggested. The Dow rose 0.29%, the Russell 2000 added 0.83%, and the chip complex that carried Thursday's pre-holiday recovery simply kept going. Lam Research advanced 5.27%, Analog Devices 2.54%, NXP 3.18% and AMD 2.37%, while Credo led the entire portfolio with an 11.29% move on a wave of analyst price-target increases. Caterpillar tacked on 3.70% to lead the Dow's industrials. These are the businesses we own — connectivity, semis, machinery — and they did the work today.

The energy and defense sleeves resolved exactly along the position-symmetric lines we framed into the open. With the U.S. and Iran reporting encouraging progress and a 60-day roadmap, crude eased and Washington authorized Iranian oil sales — yet Valero (+3.17%), Devon (+2.24%), ONEOK (+1.48%) and Chevron (+0.67%) held firm on cash-flow durability rather than the spot barrel. The reciprocal trade showed up in defense, where Lockheed gave back 3.40% and General Dynamics 1.90% on the same easing-escalation read. The digital sleeve firmed with Bitcoin near $64.5K: IBIT +2.47%, ETHA +1.40%.

FCI Tactical: When the index falls on three or four names and the portfolio rises on twenty, that is not luck — it is the structure of owning businesses rather than a concentration. We let the tape do the diverging.

WINNERS

CRDO +11.29%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Led the whole portfolio. A wave of price-target raises — Stifel to $350, an Evercore ISI Outperform initiation — followed the blowout fiscal Q4 and the DustPhotonics close, extending the AI data-center connectivity and silicon-photonics thesis.

LRCX +5.27%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Chip-equipment carried Thursday's AI-fueled beat-and-raise momentum straight into Monday, the cohort's steadiest large-cap contributor ahead of Micron Wednesday.

CAT +3.70%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Led the Dow's industrials as machinery and capital-goods names drew rotation away from megacap tech.

NXPI +3.18%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Analog and automotive-semis strength tracked the broader chip bid, adding to the sleeve's breadth.

VLO +3.17%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Refining margins held even as crude eased on the Iran supply read — the cash-flow durability we own the name for.

ADI +2.54%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Flagged as a momentum name on the tape; the analog franchise rode the connectivity and industrial-semi strength.

IBIT +2.47%

DIGITAL ASSET ETF

Bitcoin firmed near $64.5K (+0.63%) into the talks-progress open, lifting the spot-ETF sleeve alongside ETHA (+1.40%).

DECLINERS

SUPV -9.31%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

The session's lone double-digit-percentage decliner. The Argentine financial drifted on emerging-market risk sentiment with no portfolio-specific catalyst on the tape.

ATAT -4.45%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

The China travel name gave back recent gains; no company-specific news drove the move.

LMT -3.40%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

The defense reciprocal to the Iran roadmap — the easing-escalation read pressured the cohort even as the supplemental-funding backbone holds.

GPC -3.30%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

The auto-parts distributor was among the day's softer consumer-cyclical names.

HOOD -2.26%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Robinhood reportedly seeking a $2 billion convertible bond raise weighed on the shares on dilution concerns, despite financials rising broadly.

TOL -2.41%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

The homebuilder slipped with rate-sensitive names as the hawkish-Fed backdrop kept Treasury yields firm.

HOLDINGS NEWS

TE Connectivity (Dividend Strategy) drew an Evercore ISI downgrade, and the shares closed down 2.17% — a single-name analyst action rather than a sleeve-wide signal.

The energy backdrop shifted on policy, not just price. Washington authorized Iranian oil sales amid the final-deal talks, and Secretary Rubio traveled to the UAE, Kuwait and Bahrain to coordinate with Gulf allies. The refiner and midstream names — VLO, DVN, OKE, CVX, CNX — carried the cash-flow read through the supply-easing headlines rather than trading the spot barrel lower.
