The Strait, Open

S&P +1.19% to a fresh all-time high. Iran reopens the Strait of Hormuz. WTI down roughly 11%. Third consecutive up week.

THE SESSION

The catalyst the market had been waiting on arrived. Iran's Foreign Minister announced on Friday morning that passage for all commercial vessels through the Strait of Hormuz was "completely open" for the duration of the Israel–Lebanon truce. President Trump confirmed shortly after. The response was immediate and emphatic: WTI crude fell roughly 11% to close near $84, Brent dropped more than 10%, and U.S. equities broke out to fresh record highs.

The S&P 500 closed at 7,125, up 1.19% on the day and nearly 5% on the week. The Nasdaq gained 1.52% and extended its winning streak to thirteen sessions—the longest since January 1992. The Dow added 1.79% to close above 49,400, and the Russell 2000 jumped 2.11%, a sign that the risk-on impulse reached well beyond mega-cap tech. The VIX settled at 17.48, a two-month low. For the first time since the Iran war began on February 28, the S&P 500's war-related losses have been fully erased.

Beneath the index level, the session was a textbook rotation out of the war trade. Refiners and upstream energy names that had ballasted the portfolio through seven weeks of Hormuz closure gave back a share of those gains as the crude premium collapsed. Homebuilders, consumer credit, retail brokers, gold miners, and semiconductors led—every beneficiary of lower oil, lower inflation pressure, and a Fed with more room to cut. The IWS mid-cap value benchmark gained 1.31% on that mix; IUSG large-cap growth gained 1.44%. Our Dividend sleeve, with its refining and defense exposure, closed +1.15%—ahead of DVY (+0.18%) but trailing IWS on the day. Growth closed +1.12%, trailing IUSG as direct energy holdings (CVX, CNX, OKE) absorbed the rotation.

This is what we planned for. The energy sleeve was never the portfolio's whole thesis—it was a structural hedge against exactly the scenario that has now begun to unwind. The cost of holding that hedge is a session like today, where those positions give back and our broader equity exposure doesn't capture every dollar of the relief rally. The benefit is that we owned the exposure when it mattered most. Both outcomes are features of the framework, not failures of it.

IOWN Tactical: The war trade is unwinding. The portfolio participated in the rally; the portfolio also kept the hedge that made the war weeks manageable. Own the thesis, not the narrative.

IOWN HOLDINGS: NOTABLE MOVERS

WINNERS

GFI +5.98% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Gold Fields extended a multi-day gold miner rally. Bullion finished the week at a four-week winning streak as investors priced in Fed flexibility on a lower-oil path.

HUT +5.61% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Hut 8 tracked Bitcoin higher and benefited from the broader risk-on reopening. Digital asset names participated fully in the relief rally.

TOL +5.60% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Toll Brothers led homebuilders on lower oil costs and improved prospects for Fed easing. Evercore ISI reiterated TOL as one of the more resilient names in the group earlier this week.

ADI +4.99% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Analog Devices rallied on Bank of America raising its price target to $425 and Zacks adding the name to multiple Buy lists. Citi also placed ADI on its 30-day positive catalyst watch list.

HOOD +4.49% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Robinhood gained on a risk-on retail tape, with the broader meme-stock basket up more than 3% and the SEC day-trading rule still in the background.

SYF +4.22% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Synchrony Financial benefited from renewed consumer credit appetite as lower gasoline prices eased the effective tax on middle-income households.

TEL +4.08% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

TE Connectivity advanced with the broader semiconductor and connector complex on the strong ADI tape.

COIN +3.26% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Coinbase tracked a constructive digital asset tape; IBIT +2.83% and ETHA +3.14% confirmed the breadth of the rally.

A +3.06% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Agilent moved higher with the broader tech complex. No firm-specific catalyst; the rotation into quality growth was the driver.

CAT +2.85% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Caterpillar gained after Truist Securities noted industrial demand has held strong despite the Iran war. CAT fits directly into the lower-oil, resilient-capex narrative.

DECLINERS

VLO –7.48% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Valero was the session's largest drag. The 11% drop in WTI crushed refining crack spreads, and the ongoing Port Arthur refinery shutdown continues to weigh on throughput heading into the April 30 earnings call.

CNX –2.74% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

CNX Resources gave back on the natural gas and oil selloff. The structural thesis is intact; today reflects the unwind of the war risk premium.

LMT –2.52% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Lockheed Martin retreated on peace optimism as Trump indicated U.S.–Iran talks may occur this weekend. Defense names typically soften on ceasefire momentum.

CVX –2.21% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Chevron declined as oil settled below $90. Trump confirmed Hormuz is open and stated an Iran deal is close.

OKE –2.00% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

ONEOK traded lower with the broader midstream complex on the crude selloff.

ATAT –1.51% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Atour Lifestyle declined modestly with no firm-specific news.

EIX –1.19% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Edison International eased as defensive utilities lagged in a risk-on session.

BKH –0.99% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Black Hills pulled back with the utility complex.

ATO –0.77% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Atmos Energy tracked the utility sector lower.

HOLDINGS NEWS

ADI analyst action. Bank of America raised its price target on Analog Devices to $425 from $400, maintaining a Buy rating. Citi added ADI to its 30-day positive catalyst watch list, citing sustained AI and data center demand alongside higher analog chip pricing. Zacks included the name across several Buy lists for April. Mirae Asset increased its stake by 23.3% in the most recent 13F filing. Gartner's 2026 semiconductor forecast of $1.3 trillion in global revenue—projecting AI semis at roughly 30% of the total—provides the macro backdrop for the move.

VLO operational overhang. Valero's Port Arthur refinery, which suffered a March 23 explosion and fire that destroyed a diesel hydrotreater and key control room, remains partially constrained. The company reports earnings on April 30. Today's 7.48% decline reflects both the crude-crash crack-spread hit and the unresolved throughput question. Analyst consensus still calls for Q1 EPS of $2.79, up 213% year-over-year.

Broader backdrop. Netflix (not held) fell more than 10% after weak Q2 guidance and the announced departure of co-founder Reed Hastings from the board. The move was the S&P's largest single drag but did not impair the index's advance. Hedge fund equity buying reached $86 billion this week per Goldman, the largest institutional weekly bid in months.
