

Leadership Narrows

S&P +0.41% to 7,575 as a record SK Hynix debut anchors the memory trade and NVDA clears $210 (+4.03%) — while Thursday's broad chip bid narrows and a steady value bid lifts the Dividend sleeve. VIX 15.03.

THE SESSION

The broad tape closed higher, but the leadership behind it narrowed sharply. The S&P 500 rose 0.41% to 7,574.71, the Dow added 0.29% and the Nasdaq 0.29%, while the Russell 2000 slipped 0.49% — breadth quietly softened even as the headline indices advanced. The VIX eased to 15.03.

Friday's marquee event was SK Hynix's Nasdaq debut. The South Korean memory maker and Nvidia supplier opened near $170, roughly 14% above its offering price, and raised about $26.5 billion — reported as the largest U.S. listing ever by a foreign company. The debut anchored an AI-memory trade that pulled the day's bid toward the megacaps: Nvidia rose 4.03% to $210.96, clearing $210 for the first time this week, and AMD added 2.04%.

That concentration came at the expense of Thursday's broader chip rally. The equipment and connectivity names that led the prior session consolidated — Marvell eased 3.07%, Credo 2.96%, Fortinet 3.80% and Lam Research 0.80% — and the crypto miners handed back their outsized Thursday gains, with MARA off 4.69% and Hut 8 down 3.77%. The give-back in these peripheral names is what left the Growth Portfolio modestly lower on a green market day.

Underneath, a steady value bid did the quieter work. Steel Dynamics rose 2.86%, Caterpillar 1.49%, Colgate 1.35% and NextEra 0.99% as easing Treasury yields and softer oil supported the rate-sensitive and defensive corners that populate the Dividend sleeve. Oil slipped as President Trump said the U.S.-Iran ceasefire was over but talks would continue; Bitcoin firmed about 1% to roughly $63,800, and the digital-asset ETFs followed, with ETHA up 2.58% and IBIT 1.17%.

IOWN Tactical: Narrowing leadership is a familiar feature of a momentum tape, not a reason to chase the day's winners or abandon the day's laggards. We finished this week's rebalance into businesses we intend to own through exactly this kind of rotation. With the S&P near its highs and no drawdown trigger in view, the framework stays in own-and-hold mode — no tactical action indicated.

IOWN HOLDINGS: NOTABLE MOVERS

WINNERS

NVDA +4.03% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Cleared $210 as the AI-leadership bid concentrated into megacaps; SK Hynix's debut underscored the memory-supply demand feeding Nvidia's roadmap.

STLD +2.86% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Steel Dynamics led the Dividend sleeve as the materials complex firmed heading into earnings season, extending a steady bid across cyclical value.

ETHA +2.58% DIGITAL ASSET ETF

The ether ETF tracked a firmer crypto tape, with Bitcoin up about 1% and digital-asset sentiment steadying.

AMD +2.04% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Extended Thursday's analyst-driven move as the AI-demand thesis held; one of the few chip names to build on the prior session.

ATAT +1.74% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Atour Lifestyle gained with a firmer bid across China-linked consumer names, absent a direct company catalyst.

FCX +1.64% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Freeport-McMoRan gained with copper, a constructive early read for the newly added position in the sleeve.

CAT +1.49% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Caterpillar advanced with the industrial and materials bid, one of the steadiest contributors to the Dividend sleeve's gain.

DECLINERS

MARA -4.69% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

The bitcoin miner reversed nearly all of Thursday's double-digit surge as crypto-equity momentum cooled and traders took profits.

FTNT -3.80% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Fortinet handed back Thursday's advance as the tape rotated out of software and toward memory and megacap chips.

HUT -3.77% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Hut 8 followed MARA lower in the same crypto-miner give-back; no company-specific news drove the move.

HRMY -3.59% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Harmony Biosciences drifted lower with a soft biotech tape and thin volume, absent a direct catalyst.

MRVL -3.07%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Marvell consolidated after Thursday’s roughly 5% chip-equipment leg; a normal give-back in the newly added name, not a change in thesis.

CRDO -2.96%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Credo eased alongside Marvell as the connectivity complex cooled after leading the prior session.

QCOM -1.02%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Qualcomm was the lone notable decliner in the Dividend sleeve, slipping as the memory bid pulled interest away from handset-exposed chips.

HOLDINGS NEWS

Chevron (Growth Portfolio). With President Trump calling the Iran ceasefire “over” even as talks continued, energy stayed squarely in focus. Chevron closed up 1.35% as crude swung on the headlines — the sleeve’s clearest beneficiary of the day’s geopolitical crosscurrents.

Lockheed Martin (Dividend Strategy). Defense names drew a bid as NATO allies pledged to invest more than $50 billion, a supportive backdrop for the sector. Lockheed closed up 0.96%.

New positions. The rebalanced sleeves traded quietly in their first full session — S&P Global, Constellation Energy and NatWest in Dividend; ServiceNow, SoFi and Full Truck Alliance in Growth — with none among the day’s outsized movers.

Looking ahead. Earnings season opens next week alongside CPI, with bank results first out of the gate — the first broad test of whether the AI-led tape can widen back out.
