

Strong Data, Soft Tape

S&P -0.72% off Tuesday's record as a 122K ADP beat fed rate-cut doubt into the FOMC and oil reasserted on Middle East flare. Dividend Strategy held -0.27% green, ahead of DVY and SPY.

THE SESSION

One session after closing at a record 7,609.78, the broad tape eased back across the board — the S&P 500 -0.72% , the Dow -1.21% , the Nasdaq -0.85% , and the Russell 2000 -1.31% . The proximate catalyst was, paradoxically, good news. ADP private payrolls rose 122,000 in May, the strongest reading since January 2025 and above the roughly 110,000 consensus, with hiring more broad-based than it has been in years. A labor market carrying that kind of momentum narrows the case for near-term Fed easing into the June 16–17 meeting, and the market chose to read strength as a reason to fade rate-cut expectations rather than to celebrate growth. The VIX firmed 1.8% to 16.05 and gold gave back 1.0%.

Beneath the index level, the AI-infrastructure complex split rather than broke. The custom-silicon, analog, and equipment cohort closed green — AMD $\uparrow 4.13\%$, Marvell $\uparrow 3.73\%$ (extending Tuesday's record session past \$300 intraday), Qualcomm $\uparrow 3.89\%$, Analog Devices $\uparrow 3.42\%$, and Lam Research $\uparrow 2.78\%$ — while the merchant-GPU and foundry names gave back, with Nvidia -3.62% , Taiwan Semiconductor -2.24% , and Credo -6.29% . The rotation lined up with the after-close calendar: Broadcom reports fiscal Q2 results this evening, a print analysts have framed as the next real test for the chip rally, and capital appeared to pre-position toward the custom-ASIC side of the trade.

Oil reasserted itself for a third consecutive session. Brent climbed toward \$97 a barrel as Hezbollah rockets tested the U.S.-mediated truce and President Trump and Prime Minister Netanyahu traded public barbs, keeping the war-risk premium intact even as a possible Strait of Hormuz memorandum was floated. The energy sleeve caught the bid — Valero $\uparrow 1.24\%$, Chevron $\uparrow 1.21\%$, ONEOK steady. The net of it: the income sleeve's industrial and semiconductor-cyclical tilt — Qualcomm, Analog Devices,

Fastenal $\uparrow 3.87\%$, Caterpillar $\uparrow 1.80\%$, Lam Research — outweighed staples softness in Colgate and Church & Dwight to finish the day green, while the Growth Portfolio's crypto-adjacent and mega-cap-GPU exposure left it fractionally lower.

IOWN Tactical: The S&P sits comfortably above its 200-day average and within record territory; a -0.72% step back from an all-time high does not approach any IOWN buy tranche, which begin at a 20% drawdown from the peak. This is consolidation following nine straight up weeks, not a signal. We own through it.

IOWN HOLDINGS: NOTABLE MOVERS

WINNERS

AMD $+4.13\%$ GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Closed at $543.06. Accelerator demand and the rotation toward custom AI silicon carried the name higher through a red tape, one of the strongest large-cap gains in the book.

MRVL $+3.73\%$ GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Closed at $301.65 after touching $324 intraday, extending Tuesday's record session. The cleanest supplier-side capex name, with a direct read-through to Broadcom's after-close print.

QCOM $+3.89\%$ DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Closed at $250.22, compounding Tuesday's recovery as the analog and connectivity cohort firmed; the income sleeve's largest contributor on the day.

ADI $+3.42\%$ DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Closed at $437.67 on steady analog and connectivity demand, reinforcing the semiconductor-cyclical tilt that kept the Dividend Strategy positive.

DECLINERS

CRDO -6.29% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Closed at $214.60, giving back after its connectivity run as capital rotated toward custom-ASIC leaders ahead of Broadcom's report. A position-level pullback, not a thesis change.

COIN -6.19% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Closed at $163.22, tracking Bitcoin's slide below $66,000 as digital-asset sentiment stayed pressured.

HOOD -6.02% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Closed at $82.85 on crypto-adjacent weakness, compounded by news that its TradePMR unit will lower margin and securities-backed lending rates in July.

NVDA -3.62% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Closed at $214.75 as the merchant-GPU leader ceded ground to custom-silicon peers; a rotation within the AI complex rather than a demand signal.

CL -3.85% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Closed at $84.87 amid broad consumer-staples softness, the heaviest drag on an otherwise green income sleeve.

HOLDINGS NEWS

General Dynamics declared its quarterly dividend. The defense holding (Dividend Strategy) confirmed its regular cash payout, consistent with its long record of returning capital; shares were little changed at $337.04 as the defense group consolidated.

Broadcom reports after the close. While not a portfolio holding, Broadcom’s fiscal Q2 results this evening are materially relevant to the committee’s semiconductor exposure — AMD, Marvell, Qualcomm, NXP, TE Connectivity, and Analog Devices. Analysts have pointed to a sizable custom-AI-chip order book; the guidance and ASIC commentary will set the tone for the AI-capex complex into tomorrow’s session.
