

The Relief Rotation

S&P +1.05% to 7,497.86 as chips lead the post-Fed bounce. Oil cracks toward March lows on the Iran deal; defense, energy, and gold give back the war premium.

THE SESSION

The morning brief framed Wednesday's hawkish dot plot as a growth-cost trade rather than a clean inflation fight, and Thursday's tape resolved squarely in that direction. Equities recovered the ground lost in the post-Fed selloff, with the S&P 500 closing +1.05% at 7,497.86, the Nasdaq +1.91%, and the Russell 2000 +2.12%. The VIX fell 10.47% to 16.51, unwinding the vol bid that built into the FOMC. This was a clean risk-on session, and growth led it.

Two macro resolutions drove the rotation. First, the interim U.S.-Iran agreement took effect: Vice President Vance confirmed the 60-day period began Thursday, and early signs emerged of vessels resuming transit through the Strait of Hormuz. Oil cracked toward multi-month lows — WTI fell below $75 and Brent toward $78, the lowest levels since early March. That relief priced directly out of the trades that had worked during the conflict. Energy gave back (CVX -2.22%, VLO -1.45%, DVN -1.08%, OKE -0.64%), defense rotated lower as the deal reduced near-term urgency (LMT -4.01%, GD -3.53%), and the haven complex retreated (Gold -3.33%, Bitcoin -2.09%).

Second, semiconductors led the recovery. Intel's announced U.S. chip partnership with Apple set the early tone, and AI-demand momentum carried the cohort through the close. Credo rose 9.02%, Marvell 7.27%, TSMC 6.94%, Qualcomm 6.17%, NXP 5.05%, AMD 4.86%, and Analog Devices 4.83%. The chip strength spanned both sleeves, but the Growth Portfolio captured it more cleanly: +2.42% on the day against IUSG's +1.71%.

The Dividend Strategy tells the mirror-image story. At -0.44% it trailed both DVY (-0.26%) and the S&P (+1.04%), even though its own chip names — Analog Devices, Qualcomm, Lam Research (+3.97%) — participated fully. The drag came from the sleeve's ballast: defense (LMT, GD), steel (STLD -7.49%, pulling back from near 52-week highs as the materials trade unwound), materials (NTR -2.21%), and staples. The same defensive composition that cushioned the sleeve on Wednesday's down day became the headwind on Thursday's up day. That is the symmetry, not a surprise.

IOWN Tactical: A risk-on session that reverses the war trade is not an invitation to chase it. Our discipline sits at the index level — with the S&P at 7,497.86, today's tape moved neither a trim trigger nor a tranche-buy level. We own the businesses through the rotation.

IOWN HOLDINGS: NOTABLE MOVERS

WINNERS

CRDO +9.02% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Led the holdings on the AI-interconnect demand build that carried the chip cohort through the post-Fed recovery.

MRVL +7.27% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Extended its AI-demand rally; the custom-silicon and data-center story continues to draw bookings momentum.

TSM +6.94% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

The foundry backbone of the AI buildout rose with the broad semiconductor bid.

QCOM +6.17% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

The dividend sleeve's standout, riding the chip rally to close near $226.

NXPI +5.05% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Auto, industrial, and IoT exposure caught the sector momentum into the close.

AMD +4.86% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Rallied alongside the cohort; separately announced the acquisition of MEXT to address AI data-center memory bottlenecks.

ADI +4.83% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Analog and signal-chain strength lifted the name to $434 within the dividend book.

DECLINERS

STLD -7.49% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

The session's steepest holding move, pulling back from near 52-week highs as the materials and metals trade unwound on the risk-on tape.

LMT -4.01% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Defense rotated lower as the Iran deal eased near-term urgency; the multi-year backlog framework is unchanged.

AEM -3.66% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

The gold miner tracked bullion's 3.33% retreat as the haven bid faded.

GD -3.53%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Gave back with the broader defense cohort on the same peace-deal relief read.

CVX -2.22%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Fell with crude as Hormuz reopening signals pressured the energy complex.

IBIT -2.04%

DIGITAL ASSET ETF

Tracked Bitcoin's pullback to roughly $63,100 as risk appetite favored equities over the digital sleeve.

HOLDINGS NEWS

AMD broadens its AI data-center stack. Beyond the cohort rally, AMD announced the acquisition of MEXT to address memory bottlenecks in AI data-center workloads — a vertical-integration move that layers onto the accelerator roadmap.

HOOD rides the SpaceX listing. Robinhood traded actively as the SpaceX IPO drove what was reported as one of Schwab's top-five trading days ever, underscoring the retail-flow tailwind across the digital-rails complex.

EIX commits Eaton Fire relief. Southern California Edison offered nearly $700 million in relief for community members affected by the Eaton Fire, a step toward resolving an overhang the market has tracked closely.
