

The Peace Trade

S&P 500 +1.67%, Nasdaq +3.08% as the Iran framework drains the Brent premium. Growth Portfolio +2.68% on AI and digital-asset leadership; energy pressure holds the Dividend Strategy to -0.37% against a -1.63% DVY. VIX -9.22% to 16.05.

THE SESSION

A framework does to a war premium exactly what you would expect. Word over the weekend that the U.S.–Iran agreement is complete—signed as a memorandum of understanding Sunday, with a formal ceremony set for Friday in Switzerland—left Monday's tape to spend the day pricing out the geopolitical risk that had anchored crude since late February. The S&P 500 closed at 7,555.26, higher by 1.67%; the Nasdaq added 3.08% and the Dow 0.92%. Leadership ran to the parts of the market most levered to lower oil and lower rates, and pressure fell on the parts most levered to the premium that just began to drain away.

The mechanics were straightforward. U.S. crude fell roughly 5% toward $80 a barrel and Brent slipped below $83, both back to levels last seen in early March, as the agreement cleared a path for the Strait of Hormuz to reopen and the naval blockade to lift. Even after the move, crude remains well above where it started the year—the de-escalation removes a premium rather than the underlying market. Energy was the day's clear laggard across the complex: refiners, producers, and midstream names all gave back ground as the supply-disruption trade unwound.

The other side of the ledger did the lifting. The volatility complex compressed hard—the VIX fell 9.22% to 16.05 as fear pricing came out of the market—while gold gained 2.43% to $4,341.80 and bitcoin added 4.32% to $66,561. Semiconductors and the broader AI-infrastructure cohort led the advance, and the digital-asset sleeve moved in step with a risk-on bid that reached across equities, metals, and crypto at once.

For the committee, the session split the two books along a single seam. The Growth Portfolio, with its AI-infrastructure backbone and digital-asset exposure, finished higher by 2.68%. The Dividend Strategy, carrying the energy weight that bore the brunt of the crude move, held to -0.37%—a far steadier result than the -1.63% turned in by its dividend benchmark, DVY, which is more heavily concentrated in the value and energy names that led the tape lower.

A single agreement can lift the growth book and press the dividend book in the same session. We do not trade the headline—we own the businesses on both sides of it.

IOWN HOLDINGS: NOTABLE MOVERS

WINNERS

MRVL +10.42% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Marvell led the portfolio, extending the AI-infrastructure bid that has carried the custom-silicon and optical-connectivity names. Closed at $308.85.

ETHA +9.47% DIGITAL ASSET ETF

The ether ETF posted the sleeve's larger move as ETH gained roughly 9% on the broad risk-on rotation. Closed at $13.76.

AMD +6.98% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Advanced Micro Devices added to Friday's gains after twin upgrades—Citi to Buy with a $575 target and Bank of America to $560—both anchored on the six-gigawatt Meta GPU partnership. Closed at $547.26.

COIN +6.16% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Coinbase tracked the crypto complex higher as bitcoin reclaimed the $66K handle and total digital-asset market value firmed. Closed at $169.62.

LRCX +6.03% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Lam Research was the dividend book's standout, riding the same semiconductor-capex enthusiasm that lifted the growth chip names. Closed at $388.92.

AEM +5.63% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Agnico Eagle climbed with gold's 2.43% advance to $4,341.80 as the metal caught the risk-on and weaker-dollar bid. Closed at $171.80.

IBIT +4.63% DIGITAL ASSET ETF

The bitcoin ETF gained alongside spot BTC's 4.32% session. Closed at $37.71.

QCOM +4.29% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Qualcomm advanced into a constructive setup ahead of its June 24 Investor Day, supported by a recent Wells Fargo target raise. Closed at $220.81.

DECLINERS

VLO -4.45% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Valero gave back the most among holdings as crude's slide toward $80 compressed the refining trade that had benefited from the war premium. Closed at $247.16.

DVN -3.93%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Devon Energy declined with the E&P group as the Hormuz reopening drained the supply-risk bid from oil. Closed at $43.53.

STLD -3.74%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Steel Dynamics eased on the day's rotation out of cyclical-value names. Closed at $272.19.

CVX -3.64%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Chevron followed the integrated-energy complex lower on the crude move. Closed at $180.40.

OKE -3.47%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

ONEOK softened with the midstream group as energy-volume expectations recalibrated to a normalizing Hormuz. Closed at $87.45.

LMT -1.85%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Lockheed Martin gave back ground as the de-escalation narrative weighed on the defense names; the long-cycle backlog framework is unchanged. Closed at $530.36.

HOLDINGS NEWS

AMD drew two upgrades into the open. Citi's Atif Malik moved the stock to Buy from Neutral and lifted his target to $575 from $460, while Bank of America raised its target to $560. Both notes center on the previously disclosed six-gigawatt, four-year Meta partnership built around custom MI450 chips, with Citi's model translating each gigawatt of capacity into roughly $15 billion of revenue. The next company catalyst is AMD's Advancing AI 2026 event on July 22–23.

Qualcomm heads toward its June 24 Investor Day. The event frames the near-term setup for the name, with the Street focused on the company's diversification beyond handsets into automotive and edge-AI silicon.
