

Chips Split

S&P +0.18% to 7,446. Dow leads at +0.55%. Nvidia eases post-print; Qualcomm and Lam lead the chip bifurcation. Russell 2000 +0.93%.

THE SESSION

The market staged a choppy advance into the close as the post-Nvidia tape clarified rather than confirmed the AI-infrastructure thesis. The S&P 500 added 0.18% to 7,446, the Dow led the headline indices at +0.55%, and the Nasdaq Composite eked out a 0.09% gain after spending much of the morning underwater. Small caps carried the day with the Russell 2000 up 0.93%, the VIX eased nearly 4% to 16.75, and the bond market stabilized after a volatile open.

Nvidia's "measured response" setup resolved measured: shares closed down 1.77% to $219.51 despite Wednesday night's record print — $81.6 billion in Q1 revenue, an $80 billion buyback, and a $91 billion Q2 guide. A clean beat across the board, met with a clean sell-the-news. The same script played out one notch louder in Analog Devices, which followed Wednesday's 7%+ slide with another 3.48% decline to $384.21 even after a record-revenue print and a $1.5 billion Empower Semiconductor acquisition aimed squarely at AI power delivery. Beat the number, announce the deal, and watch the stock fade — the market priced both of these prints well before they crossed the tape.

The split inside the chip complex is the real story. Qualcomm jumped 5.38% to $213.41 on confirmation of an expanded multi-year technology collaboration with Stellantis, extending its automotive AI footprint. Lam Research added 3.48% to $302.24 on the same capital-intensity argument that lifted it Wednesday. Marvell tacked on another 2.08% and Credo Technology rallied 5.69% on the connectivity build-out. Against that, NXP Semiconductors gave back 3.47% and Nvidia itself eased on the print — the market is paying up for the next leg of the AI capex cycle while questioning the names already priced for it.

Iran's Supreme Leader reportedly issued a directive to keep enriched uranium inside the country, complicating the de-escalation arc the prior session priced in. Oil whipsawed through the morning before settling: WTI and Brent both gave more ground, and the energy sleeve continued to absorb the unwind of the war-risk premium. Valero ex-dated its $1.20 dividend today and closed down 5.00%, with Devon Energy off 2.79% and CNX off 2.68%.

IOWN Tactical: The sleeves are doing exactly what they were built to do. The AI-infrastructure thesis is broader than any single name, and today's rotation from Nvidia toward Qualcomm, Lam, Marvell, and Credo — alongside the power and foundry positions — is the discipline working as designed.

IOWN HOLDINGS: NOTABLE MOVERS

WINNERS

HUT +9.07% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Bitcoin miner's pivot to AI data center hosting continues to drive the bid — the May 6 announcement of a 352-megawatt, $9.8 billion lease at the Beacon Point campus remains the underlying thesis as the broader miner cohort rallied alongside it.

SUPV +7.32% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Grupo Supervielle extended its rally on continued Argentine financial-sector momentum and ADR rotation; volume registered well above the daily average.

CRDO +5.69% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Credo's AI connectivity narrative held its bid even with the Seeking Alpha rating downgrade the prior brief flagged; the read-through from Nvidia's capex guide outweighs single-broker actions.

QCOM +5.38% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Qualcomm announced an expanded multi-year technology collaboration with Stellantis covering automotive AI and connected-vehicle platforms; the stock has now climbed roughly 60% over the past month on the data-center and automotive re-rating.

VST +3.53% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Vistra extended Wednesday's power-for-AI rally as the read-through from Nvidia's capex guide flowed directly into the merchant power complex.

LRCX +3.48% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Lam Research added another leg on the semiconductor capital-intensity argument; the hyperscaler capex revision the brief tracked feeds the equipment makers before the chips themselves.

GPC +2.79% DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Genuine Parts traded higher on continued auto-aftermarket strength; the move was the day's clearest example of the rate-sensitive value bid that powered the Russell 2000.

MRVL +2.08% GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Marvell extended the connectivity rally as the AI-networking read-through from Nvidia's print broadened across the silicon stack.

DECLINERS

VLO -5.00%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Valero traded ex-dividend today ($1.20 quarterly payment), and the energy sleeve absorbed another leg of the crude unwind as both benchmarks gave more ground on a still-mixed Iran posture.

ATAT -3.66%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Atour Lifestyle Holdings traded lower on continued profit-taking from the China travel and hospitality complex; no company-specific catalyst behind the move.

ADI -3.48%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Analog Devices extended Wednesday's 6%+ post-earnings slide despite record Q2 revenue and a $1.5 billion Empower Semiconductor acquisition announced May 19. A classic sell-the-news pattern as the analog-versus-AI-infrastructure bifurcation continues to play out.

NXPI -3.47%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

NXP Semiconductors gave back as the analog/automotive semi complex tracked the ADI read; the bifurcation between AI-infrastructure semis and broader analog continues to widen.

HRMY -2.84%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Harmony Biosciences traded lower in line with broader specialty pharma weakness; no direct catalyst.

DVN -2.79%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Devon Energy declined with the broader energy sleeve as crude gave more ground; the position replaced CTRA in the strategy effective May 12.

CNX -2.68%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

CNX Resources tracked the broader energy weakness; natural-gas exposure has not been spared from the war-premium unwind.

SYK -2.49%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Stryker traded lower on rotation out of large-cap medtech; no direct catalyst, consistent with a defensive-rotation give-back day.

PCAR -2.06%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

PACCAR declined on continued Class-8 truck demand concerns and broader transport-sector softness.

NVDA -1.77%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Nvidia eased after Wednesday's post-close print: record $81.6B revenue, $80B buyback authorization, and $91B Q2 guide. The beat was clean; the reaction was measured, consistent with the brief's setup that expectations had run ahead of even a strong result.

HOLDINGS NEWS

Analog Devices — Empower Semiconductor acquisition. ADI agreed Monday to acquire Empower Semiconductor in a $1.5 billion all-cash deal, expanding its high-density power-delivery portfolio for AI and other compute-intensive applications. Expected to close in the second half of 2026, subject to Hart-Scott-Rodino review.

Qualcomm — Stellantis collaboration expansion. The company announced today a substantial expansion of its multi-year technology partnership with Stellantis, extending the automotive AI and connected-vehicle platform footprint — one of the explicit drivers behind the day's 5.38% advance.

Valero Energy — ex-dividend. VLO traded ex-dividend today for its $1.20 quarterly payment (payable June 23). The mechanical move accounts for a portion of the day's 5.00% decline; the balance reflects continued energy-sector weakness on the crude unwind.
