

Liftoff

S&P 500 +0.49% caps the recovery week. SpaceX closes its debut at $161.11, +19% from the $135 offer in the largest IPO on record. Crude settles below $85 as a U.S.–Iran signing window opens for the weekend.

THE SESSION

The recovery week closed the way it opened the rebound — with the market choosing resolution over fear. The S&P 500 added 0.49% to 7,430.86 for a third consecutive advance, the Dow gained 0.70%, the Nasdaq rose 0.31%, and the Russell 2000 led at +0.79%. The VIX compressed another 8.69% to 17.75, fully unwinding the early-week spike that accompanied the strike headlines.

The session's centerpiece was the largest initial public offering on record. SpaceX priced 555.5 million shares at $135 Thursday night, raising roughly $75 billion, and opened Friday at $150 under the ticker SPCX. Shares traded as high as $176.52 before closing at $161.11, up 19.3% from the offer and valuing the company above $2 trillion. The much-discussed risk that the new supply would drain liquidity from the broader tape did not materialize at the index level — the rotation was confined to space-adjacent names, while the major averages absorbed historic SPCX volume and still finished higher.

The second pillar was the Iran track. A draft memorandum of understanding — reportedly committing the U.S. to lift oil sanctions and Iran to reopen the Strait of Hormuz — circulated through the session, with a signing possible as soon as Sunday in Switzerland. An administration official put the odds of an agreement in the coming days at 80%, even as the President disputed the leaked terms. Crude priced the progression: WTI settled down 3.2% at $84.88 and Brent fell 3.4% to $87.33, leaving oil roughly 6% lower on the week. That compression matters beyond energy — it directly unwinds the gasoline pass-through that drove Thursday's hot May PPI print, easing the inflation question heading into next week's June 16–17 FOMC meeting, where a hold is firmly priced.

Beneath the headlines, the cross-currents were constructive. Gold held near $4,200 as the People's Bank of China disclosed a 19th consecutive monthly purchase, its largest single month since December 2024. Bitcoin steadied above $63,500, recovering from Thursday's lows even as sentiment gauges remained deep in fear territory. Notably, the energy equities in our sleeves advanced despite falling crude — the market is beginning to price normalized operations over conflict premium.

IOWN Tactical: No level was triggered this week. A week that began with war headlines ended with a peace window and the largest IPO on record — and we owned the same businesses on both ends. They finished higher. Think Like an Owner.

WINNERS

AMD +4.81%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Citi upgraded shares to Buy and lifted its target to $575 from $460, framing AMD as a legitimate second source to Nvidia as the MI450 ramp approaches and Meta's accelerator budget comes into view. The note extends a year-to-date advance north of 125%.

QCOM +4.32%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

The chip-IP complex caught a strong bid as Arm rallied double digits on architecture-dominance coverage. Qualcomm's June 24 Investor Day, where management details its data-center inference roadmap, is the next catalyst on the calendar.

MARA +3.45%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Miners led the crypto-adjacent recovery as bitcoin steadied above $63,500, extending Thursday's rebound off the early-week lows.

CNX +3.24%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Gas-weighted energy outperformed as the sleeve rebounded from Thursday's de-escalation compression — notably, the equities advanced even as crude settled below $85.

NTR +3.14%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Paced the dividend sleeve's cyclical bid alongside steel (STLD +1.44%) and machinery (CAT +1.44% to $910.57) as the recovery tape broadened beyond technology.

AEM +3.09%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Gold held near $4,200 as the People's Bank of China disclosed a 19th consecutive monthly purchase — the official-sector bid continues to absorb every bout of selling.

DECLINERS

CRDO -5.27%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Consolidation after a three-session advance that carried shares to an all-time high Thursday at $268.18. Nothing in the session suggested a thesis change — this was profit-taking in the week's hottest name.

HRMY -2.10%

GROWTH PORTFOLIO

Gave back part of the week's gains on no company-specific news.

ABT -1.64%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Lagged on a rotation day even as the board declared the company's 410th consecutive quarterly dividend — the defensive complex was a source of funds, not a verdict on the business.

LMT -1.52%

DIVIDEND STRATEGY

Defense cooled as the signing window opened. The structural backlog story — including stretched Patriot delivery timelines — is unchanged by a weekend ceremony.

ETHA -1.02%

DIGITAL ASSET ETF

Ether lagged bitcoin's stabilization; IBIT closed effectively flat at -0.03% as the historic SPCX debut absorbed the day's speculative retail flow.

HOLDINGS NEWS

ABT declared its 410th consecutive quarterly dividend. The streak — more than a century of unbroken quarterly payments — is precisely the kind of durability the Dividend Strategy is built to own. The day's share-price softness and the declaration are unrelated facts.

CVX will support a TGS-led NGL project in Argentina alongside partners. Incremental Vaca Muerta-adjacent infrastructure that deepens Chevron's position in one of the few growth basins outside the Permian.

QCOM Investor Day is set for June 24. Management is expected to detail the data-center roadmap — the AI200 inference accelerator, custom ASIC ambitions, and the Alphawave interconnect integration. With the stock's sharp advance since March resting on that strategy, the event is the committee's key holding-level date this month.
